Dear Reader,

Remember the heroes from our youth? They protected and shielded us from the woes of the world. Today, NatureMaker provides a new kind of hero, the Hero Tree. In libraries, education facilities and museums around the U.S., these strong and silent giants create magical havens for imagination to take flight. Children of all ages play in the mammoth maple tree located in the Child Development Center at Eastern Connecticut State University. Others experience a piece of history at the Cincinnati, Ohio Freedom Center where you can walk through a grove of 12'-14' maple trees and in the footsteps of those who fled to freedom via the Underground Railroad. At the Santa Maria Valley Discovery Museum in California, a 15' sycamore tree is the centerpiece of a Planting Station where children learn how to plant saplings and appreciate the growing cycle. A Hero Tree brings a space to life and reconnects us with nature.
